ASAP’s 52nd Annual Meeting: Transgender and Gender Non-Conforming Adolescents and Emerging Adults: Best Practices for Psychiatrists and Mental Health Clinicians, Educators, and Parents

On May 17, 2019, ASAP held its 52nd Annual Meeting in San Francisco, California at the Intercontinental San Francisco (in conjunction the American Psychiatric Association’s meeting). Our meeting had a timely and important focus—successful strategies for mental health professionals, academicians, and families who interconnect with the LGBTQ community with respect to transgender and gender non-conforming. That’s all of us who live between and around the gender poles of hetero-M and hetero-F. We heard from professionals with enormous experience and expertise address many different aspects of gender identity and how we can best help these youth, including controversies and challenges we all face. Attendees got answers to their questions about working with these youth and their families, to hear the latest findings and newest guidelines, and for us to interact and learn from each other. Experts reviewed medical options for transgender children, therapies for self-comprehension and development and, to make it all truly possible, ways to promote family support, school accommodation and social acceptance.

The William A. Schonfeld, MD Award honors the first President and a founding member of ASAP. This prestigious award is given to an individual in recognition of their outstanding contributions to the field of adolescent psychiatry as well as for their excellence and dedication to the clinical practice of adolescent psychiatry throughout the course of their career. Richard Pleak, MD (Northwell) received the award this year. Congratulations, Dr. Pleak!

The Herman D. Staples, MD Award honors the fourth ASAP President and a founding member of ASAP. This award is given to an individual who embodies the spirit, integrity and dedication to the treatment of adolescents. This year, Theodore Petti, MD was chosen to receive the honor.

ASAP President Theodore Petti, MD presented the Best Resident Poster Session Award to Elizabeth Ollen, PhD (UCLA) who received a $500. Katherine Jankousky (UC Denver) was also recognized for her poster session.

Editor’s News Review

Team Sports Mitigate ACE Effects

Here’s another reason for recommending participation in team sports. A study reported in JAMA Pediatrics found that team sports in adolescence reduced the odds for adult anxiety and depression predicted by Adverse Childhood Events. Click Team Sports.

But think twice about tackle football. Caution but no consensus on high school football. A recent study in the Journal of Neurotrauma found that non-concussive injuries in 9 to 18-year-olds over two seasons did not result in cognitive decline, except for ADHD kids! Faint praise for football. And what about actual concussions and traumatic brain injury? Caution recommended; No use trading ACE for TBI.

Distress and Depression Bump for Teens and Youth

Past-year rates of major depression increased 52% for ages 12-17 (from 2005–2017) and 63% for ages 18-25 (from 2009–2017). Past month “serious psychological distress” and past-year suicide-related outcomes were also significantly increased for these age groups. Trends for people 26 and older were much weaker and there was no trend for older adults.

The authors speculate that this cohort bump in distress and depression may be due to differential effects of cultural change in this young group and perhaps their increased use of electronic communication and digital media and their decreased time for sleep. The analysis is drawn from the National Survey on Drug Use and Health, a nationally representative survey of U.S. adolescents and adults and reported in the April issue of Journal of Abnormal Psychology.

Screen Time, Not So Bad After All?

A new study—and review of old studies—published in Child Development, December 2017, concludes there’s really not much evidence for big worries about screen time for kids or, more specifically, the adhering to limits advised by the American Academy of Pediatrics.

“We tested AAP guidelines concerning digital media time and did not find a detectable benefit in terms of psychological well-being in a large and representative sample of young children.” Read more on Screen Time.

Vaping, Bad After All

Just when millions of dollars in antismoking campaigns made cigarettes uncool for teens and young adults, there’s vaping, made cool by millions of dollars in advertising by Big Tobacco.

Big Tobacco introduced inhaled nicotine vapor as a smoking cessation tool, giving the impression they wanted to go out of business. Or, alternatively, provide a safer addiction for smokers who don’t like smoke. But soon there were enticing candy flavors, shiny devices and ads aimed at kids, leading to speculation BT is just selling addiction to a new generation of Americans. Whatever, vaping use by middle and high school kids doubled from 2017 to 2018 per an FDA study.
A new draft U.S. Preventive Services Task Force recommends e-cigarettes be included in tobacco product prevention education and counseling. There is also increasing pressure for the FDA to assert control over tobacco products, all of them.

In a campaign spearheaded by the California Medical Association, voters added a dollar tax to all tobacco products, most of the money devoted to health care. San Francisco just banned the manufacture and sale of vaping devices, and national first. But that’s California.

Meanwhile, not a bad idea to assess and counsel for all hazardous and addicting substances.
